PowerNet Global Launches Local Service Bundles

Cincinnati, OH, April 29, 2004 - PowerNet Global Communications, an integrated communications provider offering voice and data telecommunications and Internet services to business and residential customers, today announced the introduction of local service bundles for its residential customers. The company is offering a range of bundled package plans to meet the various local and long distance needs of its nationwide consumer base--from unlimited local and long distance calling plans bundled with popular calling features, to simple local service for those with limited needs but a strong desire for an alternative choice in local providers.

The initial launch includes Florida, Indiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, New York, Ohio, and Texas. In coming weeks, the company will announce additional states.

"With local and long distance services on one simple bill with personalized customer care, we are continuing in our commitment to provide unmatched value and choice for consumers," said President/CEO Bernie Stevens. "When you add high speed dial-up Internet access and other residential services on that same bill, customers benefit even more from a very attractive value proposition that also helps us compete and grow in that market."

The company will market its local and long distance service bundles through its nationwide network of independent communications agents and affinity groups.
